Donald Cargill

About the time the Pilgrims sailed to America searching for religious liberty from the intolerance of established religion, one man decided to remain in Scotland and preach with boldness. He preached against sin & the King of England, Charles II. His name was Donald Cargill.

Cargill was an amiable, kindhearted man, very self-denying, and thoroughly devoted to his duty. His call for freedom of worship caused him to be banned by the local presbytery. He then preached in open air meetings anywhere he could.

Cargill always preached on the run. On one occasion soldiers pursued him to a raging river. To their astonishment, he dashed up a rocky ledge and took a flying leap over the torrent, safely landing on the other side. None of the troops dared follow him, and he escaped. The spot has ever since been known as "Cargill's Leap."

Cargill was later captured, imprisoned, and condemned. As he climbed the steps to the scaffold, he turned back and shouted, "The Lord knows I go up this ladder with less fear than ever I entered a pulpit to preach." Minutes later he was with the Lord.

Many did not agree with his beliefs, but they respected him as a man of conviction.***
